The Empire of France.

To the whole world the present tendencies in France, are important. To the United States, they may prove peculiarly so. Bonsparte is to be Emperor, and an empire will need brilliant efforts to sustain it.

We find in the Baltimore American, some sound remarks in relation to this movement. "The restoration of the Empire," says that paper, which is so obviously portended as to be now beyond all doubt, presents one of the most remarkable phemomena which have appeared since the times of the ancient human nomination.

Augustus Cæsar, in the name of the great Julius, took possession of imperial power, and consolidated the Roman Empire-an organization which to this day is the wonder of the world. It was not that Augustus was a greater man than his uncle; he did not come within the limits of a comparison with him. The uncle had done the werk; he had achieved the Empire; the other followed to reap the harvest, and, like a careful husbandman, to provide for its being well stored.

"The name of Cæsar, continued for centuries to designate the Roman Emperors, long after the blood of the Cresars was extinct. It continues still to designate the Kaisar of Austria, and the Czar of Russia-representatives, even in this far distant time, of the Eastern and the Western empires of the old Roman supremacy. We are told by Gibbon, and other historians, that when Nero died, the last of the family of Julius Cæsar, a tradition prevailed for a hundred years and more that he was not dead, but would reappear again; and in spite of the vices of the man, his tyranny and his cruelty, this belief was cherished as a fond hope. So thoroughly had Julius Cæsar identified himself with the civilization of his age and of succeeding ages, that the prestige of his name had almost the force of an enchantment."

It would seem that the name of Napoleon in France has a similar potency. The Prince President now at the head of the government, and soon to be crowned as Emperor, had nothing whatever to recommend him, at first, to the favor of the French people except the associations connected with his name and his affinity to the blood of Napoleon. He has since shown a far greater degree of ability than he had credit for at the beginning; and he has improved with wonderful sagacity every advantage of his position. He controls both a positive and a negative force; positive in his own strength, and in that of his hereditary affinities, and negative in the fact that there is nothing left to France, but to accept his sway. The experiment of a Republic, from the days of Robespierre to those of Ledru Rollin has not been productive of any results calculated to make such a system of government captivating to the sympathies of the French peeple. The Bourbon dynasty has ceased to exist, except in history. It has lost all hold upon the interests and feelings of the French nation. One might go into criticisms upen Leuis Napoleon, and upon the means by which he has maintained and concentrated his power; but inasmuch as his own people are satisfied with his ascendency, it is scarcely becoming in others to make complaints or to indulge in invectives concerning

The Irish Exedus.

The Clare, (Ireland,) journal, thus mourns over the exodus of the people.

"All parties among us are seemingly turning these. their faces to the far West-the home beyond the deep. Old, middle aged, and young are on the move, leaving the old country where there seems to be no hope for the young, where hope is building with the certainty, in their imagination, of bearing good fruit. It is really distressing to contemplate the change that a few years will effect in Old Ireland, if the desire for leaving, that now agitates the people shall continue. Before this period of the year, until the present, all idea for leaving for America was deferired until "spring returned again." The season for emigration closed at the beginning of our harvest, and the people never thought of facing the wintry blast before the coming spring; but now, spring, summer and autumn are alike. The streets are daily crowded by families on the meye. It seems to them as if they had only to travel a hundred miles instead of thousands. And why is this? There is now one great inducement in addition to that which before induced them, and that is their people are there before them. The old-remembered faces that disappeared a few months since are waiting, with the blush of hope, to assist them to leap ashore on the land of their adoption and to sleep once more under the same roof, with son or daughter that they never hoped to see on this side of the grave. This is now a great cause for the long continued stream of emigration. Yesterday, nearly the entire day, the street was

They are gone, and the numbers are sufficient to

A writer describes the farm of Mr. Webster a probably one of the most notable and extensive in America. It stretches over eighteen hundred acres of land, the northern berder ending in ranges of peering hills, the southern extending to the waving sea. Upland, woodland, forest stream, field, are spread out almost as far as the eye can reach. It is a lovely spot, with its flowers, and streams, and stirring lakes.

It was Mr. Webster's dying wish that this wide domain, in all its worth and beauty, should be kept sacredly in the family without division. His wish, it is said, will be religously complied with.

The Mansion and grounds are both stamped with the beautiful characteristics of Mr. Webster's mind. The mansion is a model in simplicity, taste, and beauty, the grounds are complete pages in the best volumes of nature: adorned enriched, directed by art. The lawn, the venerable trees of a century and-a-half, the flowers, fruits, the garden all meet, and all fill the eye. All have a rich, proud, beautiful Websterian look. The mansion, the place, foliage, shrub, hill, dale—all are redolent of the spirit which has presided over them.

Affairs in Georgetown. GEORGETOWN, Nov. 9-12 m.

In no part of our town is the march of improvements, public and private, more perceptible than in that portion lying near the College and Convent. While taking a walk in that direction on Sabbath last, I was not a little surprised to see the number of beautiful dwellings, large and small, which have been erected during the last year, and of old dilapidated tenements, which have been thoroughly repaired, and rendered both handsome and comfortable. Indeed the change wrought in this direction during the last year or two, is so visible, that if a person who had been absent from it, that length of time, should visit it now, he would scarcely ecognize it as the same. Everything presents the most neat, clean, and cheerful appearance.

At Trinity (Catholic) Church on Sabbath afternoon, last, there was a large and intelligent udience, composed of all denominations, to hear the lecture of the Rev. Mr. McGuire. His subject was an enquiry, what is the true Religion? which he discussed at some length, and for want of time. postponed the further consideration of it until next Sabbath afternoon at 4 o'clock.

The temperance meeting at Society Hall last night was large and spirited, highly interesting, and impressive.

Addresses were delivered by the Rev. S. K Cox, and W. R. Woodward, esq. These meetings are fast arousing the public to the importance of the subject, and bringing out many of our leading citizens who have hitherte stood aloof from it, to its support, and advocacy.

Economy, it is said, is a good thing, and should be practised by all, but it should show itself in denying ourselves-not in oppressing others. We see persons spending dollar after dollar foolishly one' hour, and in the next trying to save a penny piece off of a wood sawyer, coalheaver, or market-woman. Such things are disgraceful, if not dishonest.

Where is the Wandering Piper! We see it stated that a lady is giving concerts in Boston, for the benefit of the poor, and that she sings under a veil! She calls herself the "Veiled Vocalist," and of course excites no little curiosity, and creates no little excitement by her singular custom. No reason is given for her veiling herself, except her modesty. The motive is a new and good one, and will pay while the nov-

The papers tell us that Mr. Webster, three days before he died, had his cattle driven up to his mansion, that he might, as he stood in the door-way, take his last look of the noble animals in which he took so much pride.

City Items.

Our market this morning (as might be exected) was poorly supplied and prices were high. Our citizens generally do not murmur at the resent cost of provisions, but anticipations of future prices cause great complaints of the condition in which our city has been placed and allowed to remain.

Columbia District Tent of Rechabites met esterday in Rechabite Hall Baltimore, D. C. R. Sherwood presiding. We learn that the Order is in a very flourishing condition and now numbers over 700 members in this District. It was organized in Washington a few years ago, and we have often been amused and interested by old members of the order, relating incidents connected with its first starting.

Our young friends who are fond of amuse ment and sport, were busily engaged this morning in making arrangements to attend the "trotting match" to day on the new track ever the Eastern Branch. We are fond of good horses and fast horses, but love for "every bone in our Lodge of the United States, P. G. John Hodson. body" induce us to engage in no trotting matches.

We learn that Master Nicholas Goedall's oncert in Alexandria, on Friday evening last, attracted a very large audience at Sarepta Hall. The audience was delighted, and Master Goodall has been induced to give another at the same place this evening. We have it from a gentleman well known to the musical profession, that Master Goodall is considered by the best musicians who have heard him, as one of the most finished vielinists of the age. His faultless intonation and style, with his extraordinary execution of the most classical and difficult music, takes every audience by surprise, and he always has to repeat most of his pieces. His modest unpretending manner wins for him (as it assuredly will do in all cases) hosts of admirers and friends. May success attend him!

Our readers should bear in mind that the first concert of Kendal and Dickinson's Boston troupe of minstrels, takes place this evening. Their reputation has preceded them-especially that of Kendall, the celebrated alt-horn and clarionet performer, and a visit to Odd-Fellows Hall to-night, will doubtless afford much gratification to all who may attend.

'I think our church will last a good many years yet,' said a waggish deacon to his minister. 'I see the sleepers are very sound.'

partly wood engravings, all executed in the very best manner.

"A better Harmony, on a better plan than this of Mr. Strong's does not exist. He has availed himself of all the good things in former works of its class, without servilely copying any. His plan combines the exhibition of each Gospel in separate columns, with that of making a text from portions of all; and it is executed with unsurpassed ingenuity. His exposition or paraphrase—if paraphrase it can be called—gives the sense of the Greek text in a clear, free, simple style, while his notes are critical, explanatory, and concise. It also contains much important matter in three appendixes. DAILY COMMENTARY: A Practical Exposition of Se-lect Portions of Scripture for every Morning and Even-ing throughout the Year. Being a Companion to Family Worship. By One Hundred and Eighty Clergymen of Scotiand. Svo.

"Scotland abounds with learned and pious ministers—men of sterling piety and fervent zeal in the cause of Ged.
The commentaries which we have read are decid-dly practical in their nature, and do not seem to have been written in sight of any party creed or confession of faith. As an ald to family devotion we can safely recommend it, and hope it will be extensively used for this purpose, as it supplies a want which has be in long felt in the churches."—Christian Advocate and Jean al.
